Acknowledgements

The research which resulted in the present Etymological Glossary of Old Welsh would have been impossible without the help of the following individuals and institutions.

I am grateful first of all to the Alexander von Humboldt-Stiftung for a generous fellowship which allowed me to conduct the research uninterrupted at the Sprachwissenschaftliches Institut of the Friedrich-Wilhelms-Universität Bonn (Germany), and for covering the printing costs of this publication.

Professor Emeritus Karl Horst Schmidt has supported my fellowship with the Alexander von Humboldt-Stiftung. I am greatly indebted to Professor Schmidt for his comments and stimulating suggestions on the various aspects of this work and for his making my stay in Germany a most fascinating experience.

I thank Dr Paul Russell who went through the earlier version of the Glossary for his critical comments, as well as for his help and hospitality during my stay in Oxford. Dr Graham Isaac was always ready to answer my questions; the discussions of the problematic aspects of Old Welsh alongside the other disputable issues of Welsh and Celtic philology and linguistics with Dr Isaac were very important and lead to a certain re-estimation of the views of the present author. I am grateful to Dr Peter Smith for his readiness to help; and to Ms Sandra Pagnell for her taking the burden of proof-reading.

I am grateful to Professor Stefan Zimmer, the Director, for the excellent facilities arranged for my research at the Sprachwissenschaftliches Institut of Bonn University, and for the opportunity to use his private library. Frau Gudrun Eigenwillig, the Librarian of the Institute, was always very helpful.

I am indebted to the staff of Geiriadur Prifysgol Cymru, particularly to Mr Gareth Bevan, the editor, and Mrs Mary Burdett-Jones for the possibility to check the collection of the dictionary slips and the most generous help. I am very grateful to Mr Andrew Hawke for his help in accessing the computerised data-base and the most stimulating discussions of early Welsh lexica. I would like to thank Professor Geraint H. Jenkins, the Director, and the staff of the Centre for Advanced Welsh and Celtic Studies, Aberystwyth, for their hospitality.

Thanks are due to Professors P. Sims-Williams and P.-Y. Lambert for their readiness to answer my questions, and to Dr V. Kalygin, who put me on the right path and first drew my attention to the gaps in Early Welsh lexicography.

Needless to say, that the faults of this publication are entirely mine.

Introduction

The present Etymological Glossary of Old Welsh is intended to offer an alphabetically arranged list of words which are found in the manuscripts transcribed before the beginning of the Middle Welsh period, and to provide them with the most important published references. Much work has been done both in the field of Old Welsh studies and Celtic lexicography since the publication of J. Loth's Vocabulaire vieux-breton in 1884 which comprised the then known data of all the early neo-Brittonic languages. Quite a few Old Welsh texts have been edited anew; more Old Welsh fragments have been found. Notes and articles which analyse specific Old Welsh words and phrases appear in the journals. Old Welsh orthography, phonology, morphology and the rudiments of syntax have been the subjects of dissertations and scholarly research over the course of the twentieth century. The publication of the Geiriadur Prifysgol Cymru (in progress) which considers the Old Welsh forms with accuracy and offers an excellent historical panorama of the development of Modern Welsh vocabulary is a major event in Welsh lexicography. However, it does not focus on etymological investigation, though provides its entries with etymological comments; it does not give references to the scholarly discussions. The present glossary intends to bridge this gap in Old Welsh etymological studies and to offer the alphabetically ordered corpus of Old Welsh lexemes with a bibliographical apparatus.

The data

Only records written down during the Old Welsh period have been used in the compilation of the glossary. Texts which show Old Welsh orthographic features and which were perhaps first written down during this period but which are found in the later manuscripts are consulted; for the sake of chronological consistency and homogeneity of the word-list, these entries are not included in the Glossary. The non-appellative vocabulary of Old Welsh was not considered as the study of personal names must be carried out within a different framework, while the interpretation of the place-names which occur in the Old Welsh documents is a separate problem. The same concerns the study of epithets; these were used as comparanda only. For (Old) Welsh glosses in MS Cotton Faustina C 1 see A. Peden in CMCS 2 (1981), p. 20–23.

The sources

The sources for OW known before 1953 are conveniently summarised in K.H. Jackson's Language and History in Early Britain which was used as a definitive guide for this study. The only text which was not used for the compilation of the present Glossary is the Book of Llan Dav, which still requires to be comprehensively discussed, and is a subject for research in its own right. The data of this very important document is used throughout as comparanda for the research.

The compiler of the Glossary felt obliged to consider the Welsh entries which are found in non-OW manuscripts as well. Words which show Welsh characteristics are found alongside Old Breton entries in several Latin texts of Breton provenance. These, marked as "forme vieille galloise" by L. Fleuriot in his authoritative Dictionnaire des gloses en vieux Breton, and by a misleading "Old Breton 2" in A Dictionary of Old Breton are listed in the Glossary. The instances where a part of a gloss could be Breton as well are specifically indicated. Glosses in which all the components could be both Breton and Welsh are not considered. Forms which show OW characteristics are found in texts of Irish provenance as well. It is extremely difficult, if at all possible, however, to assign these to a certain date or even a language within early Neo-North-West Brittonic, see Russell : 1995. These are occasionally considered in the glossary, but only in the references.

The full list of texts used for the compilation of the glossary is given below. It should be noted that the compiler made use of the edited and published texts only. Only on several exceptional occasions were manuscript readings consulted. The focus has been laid on the collection of the published analysis of the rudiments of Old Welsh; thus the glossary could be viewed as an extended bibliography for Old Welsh studies, rather than an authentic etymological dictionary.

Arrangement of the entries

The entries are arranged alphabetically according to the Welsh standard. The glosses which contain more than one word are segmented; in those cases where the segmentation could be problematic (and this applies to several particular fragments of Old Welsh versification), the components of the phrases are explicitly cross-referenced; when the segmentation is unclear, or the reading is variable, the components of the phrase are given as a complete entry. Homographic / homophonic lexemes are treated under the different headings. Similar or identical instances which were analysed differently are normally considered separately. Parts of compounds are not treated separately; their discussion can be found in the entries which contain the first element of the composite word. The forms of the verb 'to be' are collected in the Appendix II, and are not found in the main corpus of the glossary. The word *im*glinau with an unclear initial is discussed in Appendix I.

Structure of entry

Each entry contains the following elements:

1. First element of an entry.
- 1.1. The word as it is found in the manuscript or a conjectured form in the case of an abbreviated or corrupted manuscript reading.
- 1.2. Grammatical characteristics of the form. As the OW data is salient for the expression of gender of the noun, it is adduced from the later medieval sources, and generally follows the treatment of the corresponding entries in the GPC. The indication of gender is not provided for hapaxes and plural forms.
- 1.3. English translation. Plural nouns are translated by plural forms. Forms of the verbs are rendered normally by the corresponding English infinitive.
- 1.4. The corresponding form in Modern Welsh (if any). If the entry is a plural noun, the singular Modern Welsh form is given for reference. If the entry is a verb, the stem is normally given. The Modern Welsh forms are given in square brackets.
2. The second line of an entry gives 1) a corresponding Middle Welsh form(s) and 2) Celtic comparanda for the entry. The earliest attested examples of etymological correspondences of the Insular Celtic languages (Breton, Cornish and Irish) are quoted. Old Cornish stands for the Cornish entries in "Vocabularium Cornicum"; the corresponding forms are cited from Graves's edition. The Continental Celtic forms (particularly Gaulish) are also referred to.
3. The third part of each entry contains etymological commentary. The IE proto-forms are normally quoted from J. Pokorny's Indogermanisches etymologisches Wörterbuch (1959). The Latin words (in case of borrowings) are given in their classical forms or are otherwise indicated.
4. The fourth part of each entry contains bibliographical references. The list of the bibliographical abbreviations is given below. The most important analysis of Old Welsh orthography by M. Lewis (Astudiaeth o Orgraff Hen Gymraeg gan ei chymharu ag Orgraff Hen Wyddeleg, University of Wales MA dissertation 1961, unpublished), though extensively used at the preliminary stages of the present research, is not indicated in the references.
5. The fifth part of each entry gives the form under discussion as it occurs within its context; for the glosses the lemmas are given. This is followed by a reference to the source (see the list of sources).

The Old Welsh data: some problems and desiderata

The present Etymological Glossary of Old Welsh was planned as a part of a bigger project which intends to survey various aspects of Old Welsh linguistics and philology. At this point, however, it was considered appropriate to present only the data; at a later stage the compiler will offer its analysis. During the work on the Glossary the following problems related to the monuments of Old Welsh were considered as desiring discussion.

1. The Texts. As it is indicated in the section Sources (below), the majority of the Old Welsh texts were edited and published (mostly without facsimiles) towards the end of the nineteenth century. Moreover, the Old Welsh glosses in these editions are normally given only with a quotation of Latin words (sometimes phrases) on which they occur. This method of editing the remnants of Old Welsh could be acceptable at the dawn of Welsh studies. It is obvious, however, that now there is a demand for a comprehensive treatment of these manuscripts, which would account for the Latin text (as well as Latin and Anglo-Saxon glosses) alongside the Old Welsh entries proper. Several of the Old Welsh texts have been and are being studied in the likewise manner by the team of scholars directed by the Department of Welsh, University College Aberystwyth (the results are yet unpublished); for some of these texts this remains a desiderata. The other genre of Old Welsh writing, the poetical pieces, have been satisfactorily edited. These deserve now a study within a broader context of Welsh poetics, particularly taking in consideration the recent progress in the analysis of the early Welsh poetry.

2. The Languages. With a few exceptions it is commonly maintained that the remnants of Old Welsh are rather homogeneous (though naturally allowing for linguistic/orthographic variations). It was argued for the Old Breton sources, however, that some of them contain Old Welsh (as well as Old Irish) entries alongside Old Breton. It can be argued that a parallel situation could be envisaged for the Old Welsh texts proper; the non-Welsh element in these texts, represented by Irish and Cornish should be extracted from the linguistic discussion, but utilised for the analysis of the Welsh (scribal) tradition and the character of the medieval Welsh scriptoria. The same concerns the presence of the Anglo-Saxon element in Old Welsh, both in the vocabulary, and in the texts themselves. This subject in general has not received the proper attention.

The interaction of Old Welsh with the other important language of medieval Wales, viz. Latin, has been not sufficiently analysed either. Though several important and thorough studies were dedicated to the problem of the Latin borrowings in Welsh, they unfortunately do not pay the desirable attention to the chronology and the character of these borrowings at the earliest attested stage of the history of this language. Not much is done to elucidate Old Welsh linguistic contact with Old Irish.

3. Old Welsh Lexicology. The material presented in the present Glossary allows for various types of investigation. The study of the semantic fields, nearly absent in Welsh lexicology but very popular in the other linguistic traditions (Anglo-Saxon, Baltic, German, Indic, Irish, Slavic, etc.), deserves primal attention. The compiler of the Glossary attempts to bridge this gap in early Welsh lexicography with the discussion of the Old Welsh agricultural vocabulary (in progress, see OWAV in the List of Abbreviations). It is hoped, therefore, that the other semantic fields would draw the attention of scholars, provided that the data is already collected and classified.

The collection of the material presented here points to a considerable amount of hapaxes, which should be comprehensively studied. The focus could be laid upon the semantic aspect, as well as on their morphological peculiarities. It is not infrequent that the word could be attested only twice – once in the Old Welsh sources, and then in the later poetry, particularly in the Red Book of Hergest or in the Book of Taliesin. These cases should be also considered. Some obviously idiomatic set-phrases occur in the corpus of Old Welsh, and these should be studied within a wider context of Welsh and Celtic idiom.

The formal aspects of Old Welsh lexica are not sufficiently studied as well. It should be noted, that there is no available study of Welsh morphology as a whole, and perhaps the word-list presented in this book could be used as a starting point for the analysis of early Welsh morphology. The Glossary could be used as a source for the future discussion of the models of Welsh word-formation; lists of the suffixes with the indication of their productivity in Old Welsh are to be compiled. Special attention should be paid to the possible calques on the Latin forms which the Old Welsh words are glossing, as negligence of this factor will necessarily lead to the distortion of the whole picture of Old Welsh morphology.

4. Old Welsh Grammar. Grammar of Old Welsh compiled by J. T. Koch (as reported in J. T. Koch, The Gododdin of Aneirin. Cardiff: University of Wales Press 1997, p. vi) is not yet available. It could be noted, however, that the methodological (particularly chronological) approach to the treatment of Old Welsh in this grammar a priori differs from the views of the compiler of the present Glossary, as only the data found in the contemporary manuscripts could be relevantly labelled as Old Welsh. Of course the publication of this Grammar of Old Welsh will definitely open new horizons for Welsh linguistics; at the same time the compiler of the present Glossary feels obliged to note that the notion of the Archaic Neo-Brittonic, which has been advocated by Dr Koch, though useful as an instrument of research, needs further investigation. The two aspects which deserve attention are 1) the problem of the earlier dialectological relationships between the Neo-Brittonic languages, and 2) the concept of early Neo-Brittonic spelling.

There is still quite a range of grammatical aspects of Early Welsh which are in dispute, and the remnants of Old Welsh are no exception here. To mention just a few of them: the presence of a morphologically deducible future tense of the verb, treatment of certain plural terminations of a noun, and the grammatical status of specific adjectival and preverbal particles. All these issues related to the (Old) Welsh grammar and grammatical description could not be discussed in the present book. It is hoped, therefore, that the Old Welsh data presented here will make further investigation in this field more productive.

List of Sources

- AC The "Annales Cambriae" are found in Harleian MS 3859 which is dated to ca. 1100 (cf. LHEB: 56). The text was edited by E. Phillimore (Phillimore: 152–169); this edition is used. For the history of this text see K. Hughes, The Welsh Latin Chronicles: Annales Cambriae and Related Texts. // Proceedings of the British Academy 59 (1973), p. 233–58 (see also the review of it by D. Dumville in SC 12/13 (1977/8), p. 461–7) and The A-text of Annales Cambriae. // (D. Dumville, ed.) K. Hughes, Celtic Britain in the Early Middle Ages. Woodbridge: The Boydell Press 1980, p. 86–100.
- Ang Glosses which show OW features in MS Angers 477. The text is dated by L. Fleuriot to 897; the relevant glosses were written at the end of the tenth – beginning of eleventh century by various hands, see DGVB: 8–11. See also G. Le Duc, Une glose en Anglo-Saxon glosée en Bretonique. // ÉC 16 (1979), p. 261–2. Unedited; for the collection of the glosses see DGVB: 26–31; Lambert: 1983 and 1984. The references are to the MS.
- Asser The Latin Life of King Alfred composed by Asser about 890 contains several Welsh words, predominantly toponyms, cf. LHEB: 53. The text was edited by W. H. Stevenson, Asser's Life of King Alfred, Oxford 1904. See also S. Keynes, M. Lapidge, Alfred the Great. Asser's Life of King Alfred and other contemporary sources, Penguin Books 1983 for the translation and a most valuable commentary.
- CH An OW gloss in the so-called Colloquia Hisperica (Bodleian MS. 865, f. 93^a) The gloss which is dated to the eleventh century was edited by E.C. Quiggin, An Old Welsh Gloss. // RC 38 (1920–1921), p. 15–16, cf. also Stevenson: 16. The references are given to the MS (brackets – page and line in Stevenson's edition).
- Chad 2 The so-called 'Surexit' Memorandum in the Book of St. Chad (Lichfield Gospels) was dated to the eighth century by K. Jackson (LHEB: 42–6 with further bibl.). According to D. Jenkins and M. Owen (JO: 83), this text was written in 830–850, see also Sims-Williams: 1991, 32, where a possibility to date this text earlier than ca. 800 is noted, and D. Huws, Five Ancient Books of Wales H. M. Chadwick Memorial Lecture 6, Cambridge: Department of Anglo-Saxon, Norse, and Celtic 1985, p. 5 fn. 4 for the date "about 800". The text was edited by D. Jenkins and M. Owen in JO: 91; further editions include: J. Gwenogvryn Evans in LL: xlvi with notes by J. Rhys; W. M. Lindsay in EWS: 46; J. Morris Jones in MJ: 268–79; Zimmer, forthcoming; see also D. Jenkins, Sylwadau ar y 'Surexit'. // BBCS 28 (1980), p. 607–11. Glanville R. J. Jones, 'Tyr Telych' and Gwestfâu of Cynwyl Caeo and Cwmwd Caeo. // SC 28 (1994), p. 81–95. The references are to JO. A charter in mixed Latin and OW in the Book of St. Chad (Lichfield Gospels), dated to the late ninth century (at a seminar in Lichfield (1976), see JO¹: 56; cf. LHEB: 46–7 for the further references). The text was edited by J. Gwenogvryn Evans in LL: xlvi; cf. (text and translation): Davies: 263; see also HW: 214 and PRW: 312. The references are to LL.
- Chad 4 A charter in mixed Latin and OW in the Book of St. Chad (Lichfield Gospels), dated to the late ninth century (at a seminar in Lichfield (1976), see JO¹: 56; cf. LHEB: 46–7). The text was edited by J. Gwenogvryn Evans in LL: xlvi. The references are to LL.
- Chad 6 A note in Latin and OW in the Book of St. Chad (Lichfield Gospels), which establishes the boundaries of a manor near Lladybie; is dated to late ninth or early tenth century (see JO¹: 56); see also LHEB: 47 and Watkins: 1972: 4, 10. Edited (partially) by J. Gwenogvryn Evans in LL, p. xlvi; the text abounds in local place-names; no complete edition of it is available; The references are to LL.
- Chad 7 A single line in OW and Latin in the Book of St. Chad (Lichfield Gospels), dated to the end of the eighth – beginning of the ninth century by J. Gwenogvryn Evans, LL: xlvi (alongside Chad 6). No date was suggested for it at the seminar in Lichfield. Edited J. Gwenogvryn Evans in LL: xvii (cf. also JO¹: 55). References are to LL.
- Comp The Computus Fragment (Cambridge University Library MS Add. 4543), dated by I. Williams to ca. 920 (cf. EWS: 45; LHEB: 54). Edited by I. Williams (1927) with translation and an extensive commentary. The earlier editions include those by E.C. Quiggin (1912, with translation and facsimile); W. M. Lindsay (EWS: 53 with facsimile); see also J. Armstrong III, The Old Welsh Computus Fragment and Bede's Pagina Regularis: Part I. // Proceedings of the Harvard Celtic Colloquium, vol. 2 (1982), p. 197–272. The references are to Williams: 1927. 256 (the number indicates the line in the edition).
- DNR Six OW glosses in MS Peniarth 540 (Bede's De natura rerum) dated to the first half of the twelfth century. Edited by D. Huws (Huws: 501). The references are to the MS.
- Gen The Old Welsh Genealogies which contain Old Welsh onomastics and epithets are found in the same MS as AC. The text was edited by E. Phillimore (Phillimore: 169–183), and by P.C. Bartrum (Bartrum: 9–13). The latter edition is used. The references are to the pages of the edition.
- J OW glosses (several hands) in Cambridge MS Ff 4. 42 (Juvencus' poetical version of the gospels). Edited by Stokes (Stokes: 1860–61, p. 207–228, cf. also Stokes: 1860–1, p. 288–93; Stokes: 1873, 411–5). According to K. Jackson (LHEB: 51–2, following Bradshaw: 283–4 and 484, cf. EWS: 16) the glosses are dated to ninth–eleventh centuries, but see D. Dumville, Palaeographical Consideration in the Dating of Early Welsh Verse. // BBCS 27 (1978), p. 248 fn. 6, who states that "the dating of most of the Juvencus glosses to saec. x/xi is unacceptable on palaeographical grounds: they belong to the first half of the tenth century", cf. also Bishop: 258. For the hands see Bradshaw: 484, LHEB: 50–1 and particularly Harvey: 1991 and the further bibliography cited there. The references are to the MS.
- Juv 3 A poem of three stanzas in Cambridge MS Ff 4. 42, dated to first half of the tenth century, sec J. C. T. Oates, *Notes on the Later History of the Oldest Manuscript of Welsh Poetry: The Cambridge *Juvencus. // CMC'S 3 (1982), p. 82 and fn. 2; D. Huws, Five Ancient Books of Wales (H. M. Chadwick Memorial Lecture 6, Cambridge: Department of Anglo-Saxon, Norse, and Celtic 1985), p. 5 indicates the late ninth or early tenth century as its date. For the further references see LHEB: 52–3 and cf. Watkins: 1982, 36–7. Edited by I. Williams, Tri Englyn y Juvencus. // BBCS 6 (1932), p. 101–110 = Williams: 1980, p. 89–100; see also LHEB: 52 for a list of the previous editions. See also J. Rowland, Early Welsh Saga Poetry Cambridge: D. S. Brewer 1990, p. 466–7 (text), p. 510 (English translation), and passim. The references are given to Williams: 1980 (englyn and line). A poem of nine stanzas in Cambridge MS Ff4, 42, dated to first half of the tenth century, see J. C. T. Oates, Notes on the Later History of the Oldest Manuscript of Welsh Poetry: The Cambridge Juvencus. // CMCS 3 (1982), p. 82 and fn. 2; D. Huws, Five Ancient Books of Wales (H. M. Chadwick Memorial Lecture 6, Cambridge: Department of Anglo-Saxon, Norse, and Celtic 1985), p. 5 indicates the late ninth or early tenth century as its date. For further references see also LHEB: 52; Bromwich: 1980, 100 fn. 7; Watkins: 1982, 36–7. The poem was edited by I. Williams, Naw Englyn y Juvencus. // BBCS 6 (1932), p. 205–224 = Williams: 1980, p. 100–121; and in Haycock: 3–16, with a Modern Welsh rendering and an extensive commentary; see the list of the earlier editions there. See also J. Rowland, Early Welsh Saga Poetry, Cambridge: D. S. Brewer 1990, passim. The references are given to Williams: 1980 (englyn and line).

An Old Welsh gloss in "Leiden Logical Fragment" (MS Voss. Q 2. F. 60), dated to the tenth or ninth century (LHEB: 64). According to LHEB: 64, the language is Breton on the assumption of the Fleury origin of the MS. The gloss was considered as insular by Fleuriot, DGVB: 7 (more precisely as Welsh, DGVB: 261); this decision was based on Lindsay's observation (EWS: 22–3), where this MS is compared with Ovid on palaeographical grounds. The gloss was edited by W. Lindsay, A Welsh (Cornish?) Gloss in a Leyden MS. // ZCP 1 (1897), p. 361. The references are to the MS.

The OW glosses in Martianus Capella, De Nuptiis Philologiae et Mercurii (Corpus Christi College, Cambridge MS 153), perhaps ninth century (LHEB: 53). Edited by W. Stokes (1873). See also Bishop: 262f. The references are to the MS.

The Old Welsh glosses in De Mensuris et Ponderibus (Liber Comonei, Oxoniensis Prior), Bodleian MS. Auct. F. 4. 32, dated to 820 (I. Williams, Notes on Nennius. // BBCS 7 (1935), p. 382; LHEB: 47), or 817 (EWS: 7; R. Thurneysen, Zu Nennius (Nennius). // ZCP 20 (1936), p. 100 Hunt: VIII, fn. 5). Edited by Williams: 1930, 226–248 with a facsimile of fo 23^a facing p. 228; the earlier editions include Zeuss: 1060; Stokes 1860–1, 237–8; for a facsimile edition, see Hunt; for the history of the MS, cf. A. Breen, The Liturgical Materials in MS Oxford, Bodleian Library, Auct. F.4/32. // Archiv für Liturgiewissenschaft 34 (1992), p. 121–53. The references are to the MS (brackets – page in Williams: 1930).

The so-called Alphabet of Nennius in Bodleian MS. Auct. F. 4. 32, fo 20^a; for the date see above; cf. also R. Dorolez, Ronica Manuscripta, Brugge: De Tempel 1954, p. 157–9. Edited by W. Stokes (Stokes: 1860–1, 236–7; cf. Zeuss: 1059). The references are to Stokes: 1860–1.

The OW glosses in Ovid's Ars Amatoria (Oxoniensis Prior, Bodleian MS. Auct. F. 4. 32, fol. 37^a–42^a; see also above), dated to the ninth–tenth century (Bradshaw: 484; EWS: 8; Hunt: XIII; LHEB: 54). Edited by W. Stokes (Stokes: 1860–1, 234–6, corrections p. 292, cf. Zeuss: 1054–1059; fol 40^a edited (with facs.) in EWS: 56). For the gloss edit gl. pulsat (fo 38^b) see Williams 1933: 113. The references are to the MS.

The MS called "Oxoniensis Posterior" (Bodleian MS 572) which contains a Latin text De Raris Fabulis with OW (and presumably OC) glosses is dated ca. tenth century (Craster: 136; EWS: 26; LHEB: 55). The text is edited by W. H. Stevenson, Stevenson: 1–11; previous editions include: Craster: 135–6; Stokes: 1860–1, 238–44 (corrections on p. 293); Zeuss: 1060–3; for a facsimile edition of a part of a folio, see H. de la Villemarqué in Archives des Missions scientifiques et littéraires V (1856), p. 272 pl. 3. For the Cornish component, see Bradshaw: 486; LHEB: 55; J. Loth, Les gloses de l'Oxoniensis Posterior sont-elles corniques? // RC 14 (1893), p. 70; VKG: I, 13. The references are to MS (brackets – page and line in Stevenson's edition).

An OW four-line verse on St. Padarn's staff in Corpus Christi MS 199 fo. 11a dated to 1080–1090 (Bradshaw: 465). The text was edited by I. Williams, An Old Welsh Verse. // Journal of the National Library of Wales 2 (1941), p. 69–75 (= Williams: 1980, 181–189), and by M. Haycock (Haycock: 241–5), with a Modern Welsh rendering and an extensive commentary. The references are to the edition by I. Williams, the number indicates the line.

Glosses which show OW features in Priscian's grammar (BN lat. 10290), dated to the first part of the ninth century. Edited by P.-Y. Lambert (Lambert: 1982; cf. DGVB: 31 and passim). References are to the MS.

I. Williams who offered a very detailed discussion of this word (1927: 261) suggested two possibilities for its interpretation. Following H. Williams apparently prefers the other possibility – "as the sense requires a verb meaning 'to reach, to arrive' the aed may be for haedd, seen in cyrraedd, dyhaeddu"; for the etymology (cf. The meaning and the etymology of this entry offered by Fleuriot was reconsidered by P.-Y. Lambert who compared the form with Irish vn cumgabail, and MW kyuachael 'to raise, extol', see GPC: 673 and 680. The first word of this gloss, hoyloit, was analysed by Lambert as SW British. The entry itself is perhaps a hybrid, with apparently Welsh reflex of the prefix, cf. here cimpenner, see s.v. GPC does not consider this instance.

cimerdridou n pl ?

Stokes analysed the form as containing two words, hir ‘long’ and the plural of cimerdrid, which he could not explain. Loth considered this as a compound ‘long travail solitaire’, hir (see hir) + cimer (< kom-are*) + pl. of drid, which he compared with OB emdrīt ‘theoricam’, on the latter see DGVB: 158. P.-Y. Lambert tentatively connects this noun with MW cyfarthelid ‘steady, constant’ and cyfrdelid ‘beautiful’, on these see GPC: 684 and 713. For the prefix, cf. aurcimerd-richeticion.

The meaning of this word is discussed by M. Haycock. Apart from the attempt of L. Fleuriot to separate the Welsh entry from the Irish word quoted above, these are commonly viewed as cognates. Several etymologies for this word have been considered. According to Campanile, the adjectives go back to kom-anktāko-; the traditional etymology derives it from kom-okto-, with IE eneḱ-, neḱ-, enḱ-, ṇḱ- ‘reichen, erreichen, erlangen’ (IEW: 316).

According to Zeuss: 1056 and VVB: 82, this stands for co – orn, orn ‘tressaillement, crainte’, the meaning of coorn being thus ‘applaudissement’. In view of the frequent doubling of the letters in this manuscript (cf. piipaur, ceenn) I. Williams (1933: 113) suggests a reading corn. GPC: 2656 refers to this instance (with a query) in the analysis of W orn ‘blame, fear’. D. E. Evans (Ir. orn; W. orn: Celt. org-no-. // Homenaje a Antonio Tovar, Madrid 1972, p. 134 fn. 28) interprets this entry as (lit.) ‘a striking together, clapping’, i.e. ‘applause’, and hesitates between a compounded form co-orn (= cy-orn*) and a simple orn. instance from Celt. org-n-*, on which see also E. Hamp in BBCS 25 (1974), pp. 388–91.

Since Stokes’s edition (1860–1: 211–2, cf. VVB: 104) this word was analysed as di- (privative) + liu ‘colour’. J. Strachan (in RC 28 (1907), pp. 197–8) interprets the prefix as the equivalent of Irish do- (Greek δύσ-). The word was considered alongside OB deliu, diliu and OC disliu by Fleuriot (DGVB: 134 and 142). According to GPC: 1014, this contains di- and an element which is found in W edliw, lliwied, etc.

L. Fleuriot suggested that this stands for dirlimprosun (*n*i), with a prefix dir- (cf. dirgatisse) and a stem found in W llimpro, OB di(s)lembretic. The semantic shift, putative -osun, and etymology were left unexplained. Recently P.-Y. Lambert has shown that the word corresponds to Irish tolommrad, which is a calque on Lat. excerpere; he also notes, that “la désinence -osun-i est certainement l’équivalent du gall. moy. et mod. -aswn, 1^{re} sg. de plus-que-parfait de l’indicatif. discir n 'common, poor'

This segmentation of the line was suggested by I. Williams, who noted that W disgyr 'scream, shout' is not a suitable comparanda. Instead he refers to M^l discir 'fierce' and doescair 'mean'. It was argued by Jackson, that these two Irish words are unrelated (cf. LEIA: D–98), and the meaning 'fierce' does not fit the context. He holds that the word consists of a negative or adversative prefix (di- or dy-), and the stem scor-* 'host'; then "no great host". He admits, however, that the double final -r is unparalleled. R. Bromwich in her commentary to I. Williams' discussion notes that the meaning 'mean' is attested for Irish discir. GPC lists the word as a hapax. The etymology is obscure.

The Brittonic words are usually considered as loans from Lat. fibula; for a different view see ML and LEIA. The unexpected vocalism was explained (differently) by P. Schrijver and E. Hamp. The troublesome initial in OW was explained by a "fluctuating change", without specifying it (LHEB: 276), by the influence of the Latin original (P. Schrijver), and the dialect variation (E. Hamp). For the discussion of this entries and the arguments for the "Cornish symptoms" they betray, see A. Falileyev in *Ireland and Europe in the Early Middle Ages. gener?

The traditional interpretation of this entry considers this as a Latin word for 'son-in-law', cf. JO: 95 and D. Jenkins in BBCS 28 (1980), p. 609. Most recently, however, St. Zimmer has argued in favour of analysing this word as a Welsh hapax, a (learned ?) loan from Latin genere; alternatively, he writes, this could be an abbreviation for Lat. generatio (Zimmer, forthcoming). Those assumptions are based on the presupposition that the preceding ha stands for the later o; for the discussion of the similar cases with somewhat different approach, see Lambert: 1976–7.

guecrissou n pl 'girdles, belts' [gwregysau]

MW gwregis; OB guocrisiuou

This form is quoted as OB by GPC: 1701. This is a cognate of OC grugis (MS grug', see OCV: 342), cf. OW (Gen.) crishan, MIr sochrus, explained as u(p)o-kṛd-su-, IE kerd- 'gürten'. It was argued, however, that there is no need to reconstruct this IE stem, which is attested only in Celtic and Slavic, see ESSYA: 4, 77; the Celtic names for 'belt' are thus considered to show the same semantic change as their cognates in Slavic; the latter are analysed as a substantivized prepositions, cf. Old Church Slavonic čPb'3b 'through'.

This form is quoted as OB by GPC: 1769. The Celtic forms were tentatively considered by J. Pokorny in his entry *ueib-, *ui-m-b- (to *ueip-, ueib- 'drehen'), see IEW: 1132 which follows T. O'Rahilly (in Ériu 13, 1940–2, p. 163). E. Hamp notes that the better established IE root is *ueip-, and proposes north-western European *uis-mon-, allowing for contamination *uipsma- x *uis-mon. The other suggestions are 1) to analyse these as cognates of Sanskrit vapati (VGK: I, 93), or 2) to discuss them with reference to IE *ues- 'futtern, schmausen' (R. Thurneysen in KZ 48 (1918), p. 67).

OB dogurennam gl. perfundo

Hapax in Welsh. The word is analysed by GPC as go-gren; the second element is attested in the law-texts (GMWL: 163–4), and means ‘big vat or vessel, tub, pail, pitcher; dry and liquid measure of uncertain capacity’. Another possibility (J. Williams, cf. J. Loth in RC 41 (1924), pp. 400–403) is to see in this word a cognate of W rhan, cf. OC renniat gl. diuisor, for this see LEIA: R-7, PECA: 90–1; see rann. Note the plural ending, which is exceptional for this period.

2) is xxx ha guorennieu MP 22b (230). According to I. Williams, this is a variant of the preposition o ‘of’. Recently P.-Y. Lambert has reconsidered this in favour of H. Lewis’s reading, which suggests the meaning ‘and’ (Lambert: 1976–7, 529; Lewis: 1926, 3; Williams: 1930, 231).

This passage from Chad 3 has been read in several different ways. According to J. Gwenogvryn Evans (LL: xlv), this should be read as y vel yth δyδwg 'as... leads thee'. Jenkins and Owen (JO: 116) interpret this as y vel yth δyδuch, which is argued to belong to a pattern CONJUNCTION + PARTICLE + ?PRONOUN + VERB; cf. Isaac: 365. F. White (White: 145) mentions inter alia a possibility of reading this phrase as val i dydduch 'as (it) may lead'.

The verb, 3 sg. subj., goes back to IE deuk-* 'zichen' (IEW: 220).

W. Stokes equated this form with OB enbit gl. dibilis, contrast VGK: I, 21, where the word is analysed as a loan from AS unwitty, which is very unlikely. For the OB form, the interpretation of which presents difficulties as well, see DGVB: 159. It was suggested by I. Williams that this could be a "welshisation" of Irish anfuth. GMWL: 299; T. F. mannucenn ?

The word, which is a hapax in Welsh, was considered by J. Rhys’s reading is accepted though queried by W. Davies. GPC follows the reading offered in HW and interprets this word as n f? ‘handful (of grain), handful or armful (of corn), sheaf’, from Lat. manuciol(um). This loan is not attested in any of the studies of Latin borrowings in Welsh.

naunecant n* 'cycle of nineteen years'

Hapax in Welsh. GMW glosses naunec as '19' and naunecant as 'a cycle of 19 years'. GPC (with a query) lists this as a noun 'cycle or period of nineteen years', and this is the rendering of P.-Y. Lambert, 'période de dix-neuf ans', cf. Ir. noídeadae. Following Quiggin I. Williams compares this with B naondec '19', and refers to WG: 232 for the suffix -ant, cf. Evans: 1976-8, 237. It was also suggested (J. Loth in RC 34 (1913), p. 147) that the second element could be cant 'circle', cf. DGVB: 95, but see Lambert: 1984, 33, where it is tentatively argued for a possible -t- derivation.

The formation finds a perfect match in OB naudecant. Etymologically, nau 'nine' and deg 'ten', for the etymologies see naou, deccolion.

This entry is very controversial. According to Zeuss (p. 1055) nom here glosses templa and corresponds to W nwf 'sacrum, sacellum'; this was accepted (with modifications) by Loth. H. Lewis connected this word with W neuadd 'hall' (see s.v. nouodou). Fleuriot keeps to the traditional interpretation, thus 'sacred place, temple'. P.-Y. Lambert, following W. Stokes and H. Bradshaw, suggests seeing here a particle introducing genitive (see also nou, etc.); this is not accepted in DOB: 528 and cf. scepticism of GPC.

nouidligi* adj.? ‘newly-calved’ (?)

Hapax in Welsh; this word is analysed as a compound of the two elements, represented by W newydd ‘new’ and lo ‘calf’ (see *lo*¹). The lack of an expected i-affection in the first element (for which cf. OW (AC) neguid in gueith dinas neguid, s.a. 921, see Philimore: 168) was explained by 1) orthographical inconsistency or generally variable state of it in OW and 2) the influence of the Latin context preceding it (B. Schulze-Thulin). The troublesome ending was 1) compared to that of the notorious llestri (JO) and 2) explained as a Latinism, a flection of n. pl. noun (B. Schulze-Thulin). For the interpretation of this term as an Irish entry, see OWA V. GPC: 2599; JO: 103; LHEB: 607, 615; MJ: 272; B. Schulze-Thulin, OW. nouidligi. // SC 28 (1994), pp. 179–80.
